A Robot, A Ghost and An Alien Walk Into A Bar

by Mark Thomas

Short Stories, Collection by a single author

To Be Published September 2023

In this collection, robots are art collectors, blues musicians and philosophical cats. Aliens are bumbling interlopers who get eviscerated by urban coyotes, or bogged down in human administrivia. The Ghost-characters should be powerful but they are pathologically self-conscious, and constrained in their movements by fifth-century Pelagianism. In each story, a robot, ghost, alien (or a human who might as well be a robot, ghost or alien) struggle to find happiness with only modest success.

Issue 6 is due out in mid June 2023, issue 7 in September 2023, and issue 8 will be the Christmas 2023/New Year 2024 special.

Published in 10" x 8" size, the magazine comes as a full-colour publication with a matte cardboard cover, ideal for being a coffee table magazine, and durable for service as a travelling companion.

The logo and the cover used in the first 3 editions were designed by Violet Dragonlady. Robin Stacey did the cover for issue 4, the Christmas 2022/New Year 2023 special edition, and also for issue 5. Issue 6, to be published in June 2023, also has a cover by Robin Stacey.

Infinity Wanderers 1

Infinity Wanderers is a new magazine publication, aiming at being half alternate history and associated genres, and half real history, with travel and biography. In addition it supports an element of poetry, art, and review.

Issue 1 has a lead story 'The Nostalgia Machine' by Hannah Hoare, an interview with author Christopher P. Mooney, history article Under Six Flags by L.G. Parker, poetry from Ron Torrence, and Simon R. Gladdish, stories 'Stalin's Bunker'; by John F. Keane, 'Galatea' by Anselmo J. Alliegro, 'Barbarella and Kenton' by Rusty Gladdish, 'Mr Capone Was Our Milkman' by Christopher P. Mooney, 'The Bullet' by K.M. Mohr and 'Inside The Pale' by Robert Wexelblatt. Further history articles come, posthumously, from Brian G. Davies with 'Memories of Kings School, Ely, in the Wartime 1940s' and from Jon N. Davies with 'William Gough, Captain, Royal Navy', a biographical study of the man who was Byng's 1st lieutenant on the Ramillies at Minorca.

Book reviews and adverts complete the magazine.

The cover for Infinity Wanderers 1 to 3 are the same, apart from the issue number, and were designed by Violet Dragonlady

Infinity Wanderers 2

Issue 2 includes an interview with author Vivienne Tuffnell, and the establishment of two main columns for the publication:- 'Small Causes' by L.G. Parker, looking at events the did, or could have, changed history dramatically, despite being apparently small in themselves, and Family History Shorts which takes one or two family history photographs and adds genealogical information them. Jon N Davies continues with his history of the Goughs of Ynyscedwyn, focusing on Reverend Fleming Gough. Gerard Sarnat contributes topical poetry, and the magazine reviews the new novel 'The Crossing' by Kevin Ikenberry. Fiction comes from D C Diamondopolous, Clinton Siegle, Mark Arvid White, and Aaron Sargon, with the lead story being "World's End" by Geoff Nelder.

Previews and adverts complete the magazine.

Infinity Wanderers 3

Issue 3 of Infinity Wanderers magazine has a lead story by Haley Receveur 'Alea Abiecerat' and additional fiction from Rusty Gladdish with 'Damage Remedy', Ralph Greco with 'Julie Haversmith Calls the Clone Inc Hotline' and 'The Wind Talker Sets Saik', Matthew Spence with 'The Hotel Detective', Alfred Shou with "Is This..." and Grey Wolf with the first part of 'A Dream of Empire'. Poetry comes from Linda M Crate and Simon Gladdish, whilst L.G. Parker's column Small Causes looks at Kokoda. He also contributes 'Life Lived Large', a historical overview of some larger than life figures. The late Brian G. Davies has his 2009 travel article 'A Yorkshire Odyssey' published, as the places and experiences remain as fresh today as they were then. Jon N Davies continues his history of the Goughs of Ynynscedwyn with his article on the Reverend James Gough Aubrey. Genealogical articles on 'A Story From a Photograph', Family History Short, and a One Place Study (Part 1 of 2 Juniper) complete the main features of the magazine.

Infinity Wanderers 4

Issue of 4 of Infinity Wanderers is the first Christmas and New Year special. The lead story is Night Mare in Coal Country by Paul Leone. Other stories carried are: I Am The Night by Alex Shalenko; You Can't Cheat an Honest Man by M. L. Williams, Alea Abiecerat Part 2 by Haley Receveur; The White City and The Black Tram by Sonya Kudei; A Dream of Empire part 2 by Grey Wolf; and The Smiling Tiger parts 1 and 2 by Rusty Gladdish. Issue 4's poetry comes from Luke Dylan Ramsey with poetry from The Library, from Simon Gladdish, and the seasonal 'Christmas' from the late Brian G. Davies. Infinity Wanderers is dedicated to publishing history and genealogy in a similar measure to the fiction and poetry it prides itself on. The articles in issue 4 are: Urban Warfare Part 1 - Stalingrad by L.G. Parker; One Place Study: 2 Juniper, the Early Interior; Singapore: The Lion City by the late Brian G. Davies; Caleb of Cennan with His Pet Rabbit by Hilary Bryanston; Hezekiah Fleming and His Family by Jon N. Davies; and Small Causes 3 - Pearl Harbour and Midway by L.G. Parker.

A Gough Appendix

To Infinity Wanderers issues 1 to 5

In 1717 William Gough of Willsbury, Saint Briavels, Gloucestershire married Catherine Portrey, daughter of Christopher Portrey of Ynyscedwyn, Ystradgynlais, Breconshire. The Portreys had inherited the land from the Aubreys through marriage of their own and in 1752 the last of the male Portreys, Christopher junior, died. William and Catherine's son, Richard, inherited Ynyscedwyn, taking the name Richard Gough Aubrey as part of the family compact. For the next 190 years, the Gough family would be squires of Ynyscedwyn, across four generations.

This Appendix to Infinity Wanderers magazine features articles on five important figures in the story of the Goughs of Ynyscedwyn, beginning with William Gough, junior, a naval Captain, and the younger surviving son of William, senior, and Catherine.

The inheritance of Ynyscedwyn would go from Richard Gough Aubrey to his brother, Reverend James Gough Aubrey, and then to the two sons of William: Richard Gough Aubrey, 2nd of that name, and the Reverend Fleming Gough.

This appendix continues with articles on Reverend Fleming Gough, and Reverend James Gough Aubrey, who was also squire by marriage into the Williams family of Aberpergwm, Glynneath, in the county of Glamorgan. The 4th article is on Hezekiah Fleming, an army officer who would eventually reach the rank of Lieutenant General, by seniority, and who was the brother of Christiana, the wife of William, junior.

Article 5 is then on Richard Gough Aubrey, second of the name, including a look at his wife, Jane's family, the Wynters of Brecon.

Author/Editor
Grey Wolf

Grey Wolf has been writing Alternate History since he was a teenager in the 1980s, though little from that time survives. His published novels tend to blur the boundaries between alternate history, steampunk, dystopian fiction, and science fiction. He has settled in his ancestral home of South Wales these last fifteen years, and also edits local history websites, and publishes articles he has written on such subjects. Most of his poetry can also be found available for sale on Amazon.
